PartnerRe Rejects $6.4 Billion
Takeover Offer From Italy's Exor

Reinsurer to stick with previous plan to merge with Axis Capital

PartnerRe Ltd. on Monday rejected an unsolicited $6.4 billion takeover offer from Italy's Exor SpA and said it would stick with a previous plan to merge with rival insurer Axis Capital Holdings Ltd.

To sweeten the terms of the deal with Axis, PartnerRe will pay its shareholders a special dividend of $11.50 a common share before the transaction closes.

PartnerRe said it held extensive talks with Exor, which owns a controlling stake in car maker Fiat Chrysler Automobiles NV, but that the Italian holding company refused to improve the terms of its offer. Exor last month offered $130 a share in cash for PartnerRe, which the Italian company said represented a 16% premium to the all-share PartnerRe-Axis deal before the special dividend announced Monday.

"I can say that anybody that looks solely at the merits of the merger we are pursuing would realize it is very hard and nearly impossible to compete [with the deal]," PartnerRe Chairman Jean-Paul Montupet said in an interview. "They should have the good sense to stay away."

Exor said Monday that it remains "fully committed" to its offer for PartnerRe and that the proposed special dividend will weaken its takeover target by reducing the company's capital by more than $550 million.

“Exor’s proposal is financially superior, with no financing conditions, can be completed swiftly and will retain and build upon PartnerRe’s highly talented management and employees,” Exor said in a statement.

PartnerRe shareholders will be called upon at a not-yet-determined date to vote on the merger with Axis. At the end of last year, institutional investors owned more than 90% of PartnerRe with the biggest shareholder being Vanguard Group Inc. with an 8% stake.

Mr. Montupet, on a conference call Monday, said he had spoken on the phone several times with John Elkann, Exor’s chairman and chief executive, whom, he said, made clear he had no intention of increasing the offer price. The two also met face-to-face to discuss Exor’s offer, he said.

“They gave us a number, we didn’t like it and we told them,” Mr. Montupet said on the conference call, adding that there was no discussion with Mr. Elkann as to whether Exor would turn to a hostile bid in its effort to grab PartnerRe.

Unless Mr. Elkann can muster the support of enough PartnerRe shareholders to scuttle the plans of the reinsurer’s management, he will have to turn elsewhere to achieve his previously stated goal of diversifying Exor’s holdings.

In addition to owning about a third of Fiat Chrysler, Exor has two other main investments—an 81% stake in real-estate-services Cushman & Wakefield, which has been put on the block, and 27% of farm-equipment maker CNH Industrial.

Mr. Elkann, a scion of the Agnelli family that founded Fiat more than a century ago, has been looking to diversify Exor’s holdings and has said that funds from the Cushman & Wakefield sale would be plowed into a new investment.

PartnerRe has countered Mr. Elkann’s argument that PartnerRe would be better off as an independent company and Monday reiterated its assessment that it will squeeze $200 million in synergies through its merger with Axis. If the deal goes through, Axis shareholders will end up owning a little more than 51% of the company after the merger with the rest held by Axis shareholders.

The combined PartnerRe-Axis would have a market value of $11.3 billion based on the companies’ share prices the day before the Exor offer. The merger is on schedule to be completed in the third quarter, Mr. Montupet said on the conference call.

Axis CEO Albert Benchimol said in an interview that the combination is part of “an evolution” of the reinsurance industry as pension funds and other investors pour money into reinsurance in search of alternatives to low-yielding conventional bond investments.
